Lauryn Hatch Penny slacker, a longtime American classic, can conjure up a mixed bag of celluloid memories. James Dean, Paper Chase, Michael Jackson, irrational fear of preppy, thirty whiners-for-better or worse, penny slacker has undergone years of growth and decline in our collective style consciousness. But as a few under-the-radar shoe designers show, this casual but sophisticated slip-on could be the next step towards joining a more sensible male-style revival that goes well. Bridging the gap between mainstream sneakers and the over-polished tip of the wing, labels like the Reform Party (founded by designer Kristen Lee) are unlikely to reinvent the wheel, though they've got it rolling again. The styles are familiar but are inspired by more modern materials, such as the Rustic Reform Party cotton canvas, available in black, fatigue or khaki. Looking for something a little more graceful? Try the Jans acne loafers, a structured skin option in safe shades of brown and black. Whatever the style of the costumes, rest assured, there has never been a better time to save your pennies. Pimples Jans loafers, $599, available at Blackbird, 5410 22nd Avenue NW, Seattle; 206-547-2524; Rustic Reform Party loafers, $250, available at Traffic, 920 North Formosa, Los Angeles; 310-659-4313. A drop shoe that's worth every penny. Spruce Crafts uses cookies to give you a great user experience. Using spruce crafts, you take our Use cookies.
