This ToysRUs exclusive Imaginarium table includes 100 pieces that include 23 tracks, lights and sounds, a game table with a storage drawer, eight trains, two vehicles, three road signs, a gas station, five freight lights, four street lights, five wooden figures, four rock overpasses, two viaducts, four trees, a crossing gate, two overpasses, two overpasses, two overpasses, four scaffolding Let me start by saying that if you don't have 3-4 hours in your life to put together a desk on a train, then this is not the one for you. However, if you can find a few hours which I'm sure you can, it's well worth the time (and money) spent. We bought the Imaginarium Mountain Rock Train Table for C last Christmas on sale, but for the quality, I would absolutely pay the full price of $149.99. The table itself is quite heavy, made of real wood, sturdy with a storage box. What I like about this is after the train phase up, the lower platform flips over to a simple green so that the table can be used for something other than a train. (We plan to attach Lego boards to it and turn them into a Lego table). The track itself and all the components are also of excellent quality. I was worried at first that C would eventually break some of the moving parts (working crane, door, and destination board), but honestly they held fantastic. The crane rotates around, has a magnetic piece at the end to pick up the load and can be lifted and lowered. There is also a bridge that makes the train sound like a train pushed through it. C likes to make trains say Chu Chu and gets very excited by the flashing lights. Thus, the train table includes eight trains, two vehicles, three road signs, a gas station, five cargo breaks, four street lights, five wooden figures, four stone overpasses, two viaducts, four trees, an intersection gate, two overpasses, two construction zone cones, four stones and more than 55 pieces of wooden path and accessories. There are many parts. Almost too much. We bought this for C when he was right for about 2 years, knowing that the recommended age is 3. C has always been ahead of the learning curve, so I figured why not? I kept a lot of the pieces put up initially as no one in their right mind would give the child as many items. Over the past year, C has had a free choice of what pieces of his train table he would like to play. However, I still have a huge problem with two building cones and four rocks. C has never been one to put things in my mouth, however, I feel that even for a 3-year-old (recommended age) these parts are too small. If a child accidentally put them in their mouths, they would surely rocks about 1 in diameter and to be honest, they scare the heck out of me! I can safely say they're going to go to the trash. Traffic cones are on the smaller side as well (about the same size as a rock), so for safety, I put those as well. Another thing I like about this train table is that it is compatible with Thomas Train, Chuggington, and Brio Trains. We still had some Thomas trains from when E was younger that we were able to go to C and they work and fit perfectly. They even have the same sensor to allow the bridge to make noise when it is pushed across. The assembly is wise. My gracious. Overwhelming to say the least. The instructions are semi-useful in letting you know which boxes to open and what is contained in these boxes. They also instruct you on how to assemble accessories such as the GarageMy train problem came with track assembly. None of the pieces are actually labeled leaving it up to you to figure out which piece is L and which piece of J. It was definitely a pain in the butt and took about an hour just for the track. Once all collected, KEEP YOUR INSTRUCTIONS! I threw mine away, thinking I didn't need them anymore. I almost had a full-scale panic attack when C came up to me with a piece of track and said: It's a broken mom. I had a vague image in my head about how it was supposed to look... and since I threw the paper instructions away, I had to search them online, but it would be a lot easier if I had instructions at hand. In total, 5 out of 5 stars. The hours are fun for the whole family and definitely universal. Just keep the stones and cones (they are in box B) from the little hands until you personally feel comfortable giving them to your child. -Kirstyn This item does not belong on this page.
